PRETTY WEDDING SOLEMNIZED IN FRANKFORT

St. Peter's Evangelical and Reformed church in Frankfort was the scene of a very pretty wedding Sunday, December 8th, when Miss Marietta Rahm, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Rahm, became the bride of Mr. Franklin Christiansen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Christiansen of Frankfort. Rev. G. S. Gerhold, pastor of the church read the double ring service.

The church was prettily decorated with palms and cut flowers. As this was also the 25th wedding anniversary of the bride's parents the cut flowers were in honor of that occasion.

Mrs. Ted Friedley of Lemont played several organ selections preceding the ceremony. Miss Elsie Fern Schwartz, cousin of the bride sang "I Love You Truly" and "Because".

The ushers and candle-lighters were Harold Smith, cousin of the bride and Herbert Schoop, cousin of the groom.

Promptly at three o'clock the bridal party took their places at the altar. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

She was lovely in a white satin gown with a long veil and a bouquet of white roses and mums.

The maid of honor, Miss Lucille Schilling wore a gown of rose satin, with a blue veil of the same color and carried a bouquet of roses and mums.

Miss Marietta Christiansen, sister of the groom, served as bridesmaid. She was dressed in a blue satin gown with a blue veil of the same color and carried a bouquet of the same as the maid of honor.

Little Marlene Holl was the flower girl, who scattered petals on the bride's path. She was very sweet in a gown of blue satin floor length.

Scherril Rahm, brother of the bride, and Lloyd Lühring, cousin of the groom were the latter's attendants.

A reception was held in the social room of the church which was attended by one hundred people.

The bride has been employed at the "Balchowsky" department store in Frankfort for the past number of years. The groom is employed by his father.

At the reception, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Rahm was honored by a special address delivered by Rev. Mr. Gerhold who also presented to them a silver token in remembrance of him and his family, which was deeply appreciated.

Another reception was held in the Rahm home for both couples, following the one in the church where many relatives and friends gathered to wish them well.

Harry Landau and Helen Sippel United In Marriage

Last Saturday afternoon, December 7, the Wm. Landau home at West Peotone was the scene of a lovely late fall wedding, when Miss Helen M. Sippel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Sippel of Tinley Park, became the bride of Mr. Harry Landau of Peotone.

Promptly at four o'clock, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Betty Andres, Joan Sippel, niece of the bride, lighted the candles, while the groom and his best man, Irvin Rehberg, his nephew, took their places before the candle-light table.

The bride's maid, Alma Landau, cousin of the groom was beautifully attired in a gown of wine slipper satin with gold accessories and carried an arm bouquet of baby mums and Talisman roses.

Slowly, and on the arm of her father, came the bride, lovely in a gown of ivory slipper satin with a train and a finger-tip veil caught with a halo of pale blue flowers, fashioned by the bride herself. Following the ceremony, Betty Andres sang, "O Promise Me."

A wedding dinner, after the ceremony, was served in the Hoermann's hotel in Manhattan to the members of the immediate families. The wedding cake was a gift from the bride's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Andres of Peotone.

A reception was held in the evening where many lovely gifts were received by Mr. and Mrs. Landau.

At a late hour the guests departed, wishing the newly-weds, much happiness in the future. They will reside on a farm west of Peotone.

A Prayer

God of all nations, we pray for all the peoples of thy earth; for those who are consumed in mutual hatred and bitterness; for those who make bloody war upon their neighbors; for those who tyrannously oppress; for all who groan under cruelty and subjection. We pray Thee for all who bear rule and responsibility; for child races and dying races; for outcast tribes, the backward and the downtrodden; for the ignorant, the wretched, the enslaved. We beseech Thee to teach mankind to live together in peace, no man exploiting the weak, no man hating the strong, each race working out its destiny, unfettered, self-respecting, fearless. Teach us to be worthy of freedom; free from social wrong, free from individual oppression and contempt, pure of heart and hand, despising none, defrauding none, giving to all men, in all the dealings of life, the honor we owe to those who are Thy children, whatever their race, their color or their caste. Amen.

A Gospel Curb on Communism

Lutheran Hour Cites Unbelief as National Menace—Urges Return to Bible for Truth

ST. LOUIS, (Special)—While government agencies, Congressional Committees and patriotic societies wage a direct war upon the spread of Communism in America, the Lutheran Hour radio program has become an effective force against the "Red Menace" for a different reason and along a totally different yet nonetheless effective front.

In fact, the broadcast is rapidly becoming a world-wide protest against the many "isms" of unbelief, for the Lutheran Hour is now heard not only from coast to coast in the United States, but in 15 foreign countries and in the Spanish language as well as English.

Originated as a crusade for Bible belief, and with the slogan "Bringing Christ to the Nations" as its theme, it was inevitable that the Lutheran Hour should come to grips with Communism. When the noted Lutheran Hour speaker, Dr. Walter A. Maier, attacks the Communist doctrine as a "destroyer of human hope," he expresses not only his own views as a theologian but the strong convictions of the sponsors of the broadcast.

The Lutheran Laymen's League, a national organization of men whose initiative and faith have helped the broadcast grow from a network of eight stations to 235 in five years, are solidly behind the noted evangelist. They are not concerned with the political aspects of Communism, but they realize that the "Red" doctrine seeks to destroy religious faith and to stamp out the Bible. They have been made acutely aware, through letters to the Lutheran Hour, that thousands of American homes already have been infected with the virus of Communist unbelief.

People seeking spiritual guidance, or joyfully reporting blessings received through faith, send a tremendous volume of mail to the Lutheran Hour. As many as 12,500 letters in a single week are received at headquarters of the Lutheran Laymen's League, shown above. Below—the noted Lutheran Hour speaker, Walter A. Maier, Ph. D., at the microphone.

With the cooperation of the clergy and educators of their church, these Lutheran laymen have made the Lutheran Hour a continually expanding crusade for the Gospel. The listening audience, catching the spirit of the broadcast, has come forward with generous support to help pay the cost of the radio time. Local pastors in hundreds of communities coordinate their activities to the general program by visiting local listeners seeking spiritual guidance.

Communism is only one form of unbelief against which the Lutheran Hour carries on its international crusade. Sponsors of the broadcast regard so-called "modernism" in the churches a greater menace than Communism or atheism, and Dr. Maier has repeatedly pointed to the "destructive spread of anti-Biblical doctrines through certain universities."

More than once the Lutheran Hour has publicly challenged anybody to prove a single error in the Bible, and Dr. Maier has often reminded his audience that all such attempts have failed through centuries of doubt and disbelief. He has pointed out on the other hand how many of the prophecies of the Old Testament have been fulfilled in the life of Christ and by countless other events in civilized history.

Christmas Eve Church Service Held in Stable

Congregation Selects Barn After Fire Destroys Church Building.

By REV. BENNINGTON ROSS
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
One of the most unusual Christmas Eve services in the country was held in Kansas City last year when members of the Jackson Avenue Methodist church met in a stable.

Desire for a unique setting had not prompted use of this stable, but the choice was forced upon the congregation by a fire which had destroyed their church that morning. Although organ music was lacking and a small stove did not provide perfect them, the onlookers offered a prayer of gratitude that the damage had not been worse.

Faced with the necessity of calling off their Christmas eve services, the members immediately agreed to the suggestion that they meet in an old deserted stable nearby.

Prospects of celebrating Christmas in a common stable aroused spontaneous enthusiasm, as members worked all day to prepare the building for services. The old stable was swept from the hayloft to its concrete floor. A stove was improvised to furnish some relief from the biting cold, and chairs were borrowed and arranged.

People pressed in and filled the building as evening approached. The Christian Endeavor service for the young people was marked by unexpected features which had been prepared to meet the occasion. A young author read an original Christmas story, and an accordionist led the singing of hymns.

Solemn evening services followed the young people's worship. The choir took its seat on one side of the stove next to the accordionist and the pastor assumed his post at the improvised pulpit.

The congregation has long prided itself on its singing, but that night the words of "Silent Night" and "Joy to the World" rose to the bare rafters, filling the stable.

Seated in a semicircle facing the pulpit in the little old stable, the congregation was told by the pastor how the little Christchild was born in a Bethlehem manger. The simplicity of the surroundings seemed to give this story an even deeper meaning.

As the moonlight streamed through the window in the old stable,

the congregation arose and sang, "All Hail, Emmanuel."

The congregation was radiant when the service ended, and the two small boys who had come early that morning to rehearse their Christmas pageant forgot completely that it would have to be postponed.

Selection of Gifts Rates as Real 'Art'

By ALLAN REID

There is more to gift giving, particularly Christmas gift giving, than the mere fulfilling of obligations. The giving of gifts can be fun for the giver as well as the recipient.

The instance of the little crippled boy who received a book on the life of Steinmetz bears out the point. Steinmetz, the electrical wizard, dwarfed and crippled, was an inspiring example to the crippled boy. It was convincing testimony that there is opportunity for everyone in the world, no matter how badly handicapped, if one but follows the right channels. It gave that little cripple a pattern of life. It was a superbly intelligent wonder working gift, that book.

Gifts should be designed to serve beneficent purposes in the lives of those to whom they are sent. An inexpensive kit of tools may be the means of starting a young man off on a successful career. An expensive, even second-hand, sewing machine may result in the lifting of the entire personality of a girl whose fund for clothes is limited. These are the sort of gifts which have a deeper meaning—a constructive rather than ornamental value.

Also, there should be a fitting regard for what the recipient already possesses. The instance of the person who received a set of the Encyclopedia Britannica, shortly after he had purchased one, illustrates how thoughtless and wasteful gift giving may be. An automobile radio to one who does not own a car; candy to those who are on a diet; a drawing outfit for one who has neither talent nor interest in art, are examples of pointless gift giving. They betray not only an absence of interest but also a lack of intelligence.

It is well to get away from the ordinary in the choice of gifts. Dolls, cigars, neckties need not make up the entire Christmas gift list. On the other hand, a bicycle or pair of roller skates for the youngster who has a long trek to school, a mandolin for the girl who likes music but whose folks will not be able to afford a piano for some years to come; a game for the chap who is inclined toward developing his mental powers and get fun out of doing so—chess, checkers, citadel, and the like—are worthwhile gifts.

In essence, therefore, give meaningfully. Give as you would want to be given to—with good taste, intelligence, and kindness.

R. O. T. C. Expands, Enrolls 197,000 Men

MINNEAPOLIS.—The army of students taking R.O.T.C. military training at American colleges, high schools, and academies, has expanded another 11,000 men with the fall enrollments of 1940, to a total enrollment of 197,798 trainees.

Applications are pouring into the war department for establishment of new R.O.T.C. units from schools and colleges now without them; applications are already on file from 375 schools, treble the number of institutions represented on the application files of the war department a year ago.

There is little immediate likelihood of any of these requests being granted, as the army cannot spare any more experienced officers for instruction purposes, according to a new report on military training in U. S. schools by Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

Total R.O.T.C. student military enrollment totaled 186,750 men in the academic year 1939-1940, which was an increase of 20 per cent over the previous two years. The 1940-41 enrollment consists of 106,651 men taking the basic two-year training, 18,996 taking the advanced course, and 72,151 youths enrolled in junior units—of prep and high school grade, according to the report.

Meanwhile the comparatively limited group of students in naval R.O.T.C. units is also showing a sharp expansion, to a number approximating 3,000, at 19 universities

Opinion in Washington divided on how to speed up production to aid Britain . . . Effective opposition foreshadowed by Democrats voting with Republicans to defeat adjournment move.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—Everything now depends on the very point that Wendell Willkie tried so hard to put over during the campaign—production. Particularly, of course, production of planes, munitions, ships and other war supplies for Britain.

President Roosevelt is being told by several of his advisers that his place in history will depend very largely on what happens to Britain in the remainder of the war. If Britain goes down, he has been told, there will always be historians who will blame America's failure to supply Britain with the necessities of war. If she survives, America will be given the credit for having saved her by furnishing these necessities.

This advice is not being given the President with a view to overcoming any reluctance on his part to help Britain. There is no doubt about the President's desire to do that.

INCREASE PRODUCTION
Nevertheless there are various theories about what could be done to increase production of the things Britain so vitally needs. Some of these ways are very distasteful to important figures in the administration. Some of them are, to put it mildly, distasteful to the President himself.

There are people in the administration, on the other extreme, who would like to abolish the national defense commission. These include people with widely varying reasons for wanting to get rid of it. Some of the more radical resent the occasional outbursts from individuals in the commission which seem to curb freedom for labor to fight for improvements. Others disagree with this criticism, but would like to see the whole process of procurement revert to the war and navy departments. These departments do the buying for our own national defense now, of course, but there are those who would like to see the advisory function of the defense commission eliminated.

There is also the question of more power for the defense commission, whether it should have a chairman who could function without running to the President every whistitch. On this point the President has given no sign of yielding his present tight control.

ADJOURNMENT DEFEATED

The most significant thing about the refusal of the house of representatives to adjourn, when everybody knew that President Roosevelt wanted congress to go home, is not the majority of 43 against the adjournment resolution, but the fact that 45 Democrats voted with the Republicans. And this despite the impassioned appeal of one Democratic member, in the discussion before the motion was put, that it was an "insult" to the President to oppose adjournment.

If that gentleman was right then 45 Democratic members of the house voted to "insult" the President.

Of course, their votes did not mean anything of the sort. Very few of them would want to "insult" the President, even if one studied their private views. But these 45 were perfectly willing to oppose something the President wanted, and to do so in public. Most of them, for that matter, were perfectly willing later to subscribe to the President's own comment that if congress wanted to stay in session it was all right with him.

Coming so soon after Roosevelt's tremendous electoral vote victory, and considering that Roosevelt has four more years of power, the fact that 45 Democrats in the house voted against something he wanted does not foreshadow a maximum of co-operation between the White House and Capitol Hill.

'INSURGENTS' IN CONTROL
On the contrary there is every indication that congress, and especially the house, may become as independent as the proverbial hog on ice.

This adjournment vote demonstrated that the new leadership of the house is no more able to perform miracles than when Speaker William B. Bankhead was alive. The chief difference is that in Bankhead's time there was no certainty that Roosevelt would not retire to private life next January. When the house voted against adjournment; it KNEW that Roosevelt would be in power during two more congresses.

While the Democratic majority will be slightly greater in the next house of representatives, this increase is not important. Forty-five Democrats are plenty, when joining the Republican representatives in any vote, to become a majority.

So that in a way what might be called the independent Democrats, though as a matter of fact most of these "insurgents" are old-line party men, will control the house from now on—certainly for the next two years.

Demand for Farm Products Is Improving

LaSalle Map of Business Conditions

The above map pictures the current condition of business and agriculture for the month of December, 1940. It indicates that the harvest of most major farm crops has been above average and that farm prices are higher than last year. Also, Christmas buying in retail stores is close to the highest on record, according to the figures compiled by the La Salle Extension University of Chicago.

By L. G. ELLIOTT

President, La Salle Extension University.

U. S. farmers this year have raised larger than average crops, and are getting higher prices than they received a year ago. Their total cash income will be close to the largest in 11 years.

The demand for farm products continues to improve and is expected to be even greater in 1941. Larger payrolls for industry mean that consumers will be able to spend more for food and clothing. These increases are already speeding up holiday buying in retail stores. The

Brazil's Surplus Coffee

Used for New Plastics

Brazil will endeavor to dispose of some of its huge surplus coffee production by converting coffee into plastics, in a new plant.

Within a month the plant will be turning out a molding power from which it will be possible to make a wide range of plastic objects.

The plant will have a capacity of 37,000 bags of coffee a year, and may be expanded to consume 5,000,000 bags annually. This would considerably reduce the destruction of coffee beans in Brazil which has exceeded 9,000,000 bags in one year.

Because of the low price of this surplus coffee, the new plastics will be among the cheapest to produce. Another factor contributing to its low price is the fact that the coffee beans not only contain the necessary filler but also the resin which is needed to make the plastics.

Christmas trade is running ahead of even the high volume of last year and will probably be above all previous peaks.

Those farmers who produce grains, fruits, tobaccos, meat animals, and dairy products have had the greatest gains in income, while those raising cotton and vegetables have received smaller increases over a year ago. Improved demand from consumers, however, has recently been helping these crops. Cotton and woolen mills have been especially busy for some time.

The foreign demand for agricultural products is lagging far behind the domestic demand. Although current shipments abroad are large, they consist mostly of industrial goods and war materials. Exports of farm products are likely to remain relatively small for many months.

Supplies of all crops are large enough to provide adequate food and feed during the next season as well as leave plenty on hand for carry-over.

The supply of feed grains per animal is the largest on record and conditions remain most favorable for those farmers raising live stock and producing dairy products. Cattle prices have been better than have the prices of hogs and poultry.

Industrial activity has been speeded up and the volume of goods being turned out by factories surpasses all previous records. The national defense program and the building of inventories has had much to do with this increase. A considerable part of it, however, is due to normal business expansion.

THE STORY THUS FAR

Virgie Morgan, widow, and owner of the Morgan paper mill in the Carolina mountain district, turns down a marriage proposal from Wallace Withers. He leaves in a rage. Branford Willis, a young stranger, who has been lost in the mountains for three days, finds his way to the Morgan home. He is fed and allowed to remain overnight. He identifies himself as a government employee, working with surveyors in the district. Willis develops pneumonia and is forced to remain in the household. Marian, Virgie's daughter, dislikes Willis. Trouble is developing as Withers meets Stanley Daniels, the mill's chemist. Virgie learns someone is attempting to obtain title to timber lands owned by Tom Pruitt, life-long friend of her deceased husband and part owner of the mill.

"We"—the older man had thin lips and a mouth that shut like a trap—"are victims of the Phillips' outfit."

Virgie kept silent. Very likely these were some of the crowd who had put up the money to back Phillips. Obviously they had no idea who she was. They thought her a quaint mountain character, probably, so she kept to the part, staring dully and curiously at them, as mountain people did.

Slamming her worn gears, she drove on up the ridge, turning south at her line and bumping across a stony meadow, sun-washed and pleasant.

She found her foresters eating their lunch, their legs dangling from the muddy tail of their truck. She shared their lukewarm coffee, inspected the damp little hillocks where baby spruce stood and shivered, feeling their cold, small, bewildered rooks groping in strange, chill darkness.

"I hope we get a snow so they don't dry out too fast," she said.

"We heard a car a while back," one of the men said. "See anybody down that way, Miss Morgan?"

"I was going to speak about that," Virgie screwed the lid on a thermos bottle. "Much obliged, you boys—I meant to get home for lunch but I got delayed, as usual. About that car—I saw 'em. And I want you to quit early—you, too, Joe—knock off before three, leave the truck here, and go over the other side down toward Little Fork. There's a piece of hardwood down there—a hundred and sixty-odd acres. Take a good look at it and call me up tonight."

"Pruitt's stuff, eh?" said Joe, who knew these timbered slopes and ridges as well as Virgie did.

"It used to be Pruitt's stuff. Something's up. And I'm not going to let Tom be gyped by another bunch of slick talkers with blue-prints in their hands and black iniquity in their minds. Don't call up till after seven, hear? And don't talk to anybody but me about this business."

"Sure, boss—we understand. You don't want it mentioned to Pruitt, then?"

"I'll talk to Pruitt. Crank this old caboose for me, will you?"

She was thinking so absently as she drove in at the gate of the plant that she ran over a steam hose and ripped a sizable sliver from the corner of the tool-house before she came to and stopped the truck.

Tom Pruitt heard the impact of her arrival and came slouching out of the back shed, picking gum off the palms of his hands.

"Anybody else bust up the premises like that and you'd fire him," he drawled amiably. "That steering-gear busted?"

"Oh, shut up!" grumbled Virgie, climbing down stiffly.

She was irritated by Tom. No man so huge should be so naive, so helpless.

"Whoever stuck that shanty out there in the way must have thought we'd be hauling stuff in here in oxcarts forever," Virgie continued to fume as she tramped into the office.

Tom opened the door for her. "I reckon Dave put it there," he said, calmly.

"Come in here," Virgie ordered.

Tom followed her obediently and began punching at the stove. Virgie made a complicated task out of getting her hat off and her desk opened. She did not look at Tom. She was exasperated, and when her temper got the upper hand her tongue slipped, and she did not want it to slip. She had to say the right thing to Tom, who was so helpless in the presence of law and finance and the crisscross web men weave of these two strands to hide the simple intent of their acts.

"Sit down," directed Virgie, "and don't squirm. Lucy, you go out and get the time slips. Pruitt and I have got business to talk over."

Lucy rose meekly, put on her coat. "How soon shall I come back, Mrs. Morgan?"

"Fifteen minutes is all I need. And if you hang around that laboratory, walk in the air some before you come back in here. There may be worse smells than young Daniels' invents, but Satan has got a monopoly on 'em."

Tom draped his long legs over a stool and twisted his hat.

"I reckon you found a seeder tree out that hadn't ought to be cut," he said. "I expect I done it."

Virgie swiveled her chair around. The darkened leather cushion on the back of it still held the print of David Morgan's lean shoulder-blade.

"I'm not going to talk about Morgan trees," she said. "I want to talk about yours. Do you know anything about that property of yours over the ridge—that hardwood tract? What shape is it in?"

Tom twisted the hat nervously. "I sold it. Way back in '26. You knew about that I reckon. I sold it to that Phillips' outfit. They paid me the first payment. They ain't never paid any more."

"What sort of papers did you get? Have you got a lien?"

"They're all in the safe. Dave put 'em away for me. Dave told me I'd ought to foreclose—then he got down and you know how we been ever since—we ain't had time to think of nothing but keeping this here mill running."

Virgie sighed. "It's my fault, I suppose. I've got to take care of you—just like I've got to take care of Lottie and Lucy out yonder and some more helpless people."

"I got a good piece of money out of that land," Tom defended.

"They defaulted on the contract, didn't they? The company's out of existence. It will take a lawsuit, probably, to repossess it—but somebody's interested in it. I met a couple of men—bankers, they looked like—up on the ridge. They were asking the way to that piece you've got over there—that strip down Hazel Fork with the big poplar on it. You got those papers out, Tom, and let me look into them."

Tom lumbered out of his chair. There was one kind of action he could understand, indorse, and follow. Strange men had been on his land—land that Virgie said was his.

"I 'low them fellers better keep off, over yonder," he boomed, his eyes dour. "I don't know no law, but if that's my poplar them bankers better keep off my place."

"Well, you've got to have the papers first. I'll have Lucy open the safe for you."

But when Lucy came back, moon-eyed and absent, with a droop of unhappiness about her mouth, Virgie regarded her with impatience.

Lucy had been strung tight as a fiddle lately, making mistakes and being rushingly apologetic about them, jumping when the telephone rang.

Virgie knew what was the matter with Lucy. Young Stanley Daniels was flattered by the sight of Lucy's little silver heart fluttering on her sleeve. He had grown arrogant and cagey.

Lucy needed shaking. So, because she was disgusted with Lucy's meekness, Virgie climaxed a day of exasperations by giving the girl a raise.

"Go out and buy yourself a new hat and some lipstick," she ordered, "and if that young Daniels is hanging on the gate when you start home give him the back of your hand and your chin in the air. I can do all the moping we need in this pulp business."

Lucy was tremulously grateful and husky. "It isn't—that exactly, Mrs. Morgan. It's—oh, everything! Old lamps and the rug wearing out—and food costing so much—"

"I know," Virgie was gentle. "We had a sofa that flopped over and made a bed and my brother had to sleep on it. It was always flopped down in the parlor when I had a beau. Don't let it get you down, Lucy."

At night Joe and Ed reported that the two strangers had walked over Pruitt's land, climbed back into their car, and gone away again. She would hunt up her lawyer, as soon as she had time. Virgie decided, and find out just what could be done for Tom.

Young Mr. Branford Willis was still seriously ill. A half-dozen telegrams had so far failed to locate anyone who belonged to him or who might be interested in him. Virgie had that to worry about.

She took time to hope that Lucy had found a decent hat.

She did not know that Lucy was sitting alone at home, among the ravelings, and that Stanley Daniels was, at that moment, occupying a rocker in front of Wallace Withers' old wood-burning stove, smoking one of Wallace's five-cent cigars and thinking very well of himself.

CHAPTER IV

When he let himself go, Wallace Withers was an eloquent man. He loved to hear his own voice editorializing, expounding opinions, setting the world right.

Now he walked up and down his sitting-room, talking as he had not talked in months, his rough hair standing away from his temples, a flush coming and going on his watted neck.

This young fellow, Daniels, from the Morgan mill, was a flattering auditor. Middle-age is always a trifle flushed and important when youth condescends to listen. Withers was painting a picture of the pulp business—of the Morgan pulp business, as he averred it could be.

Bigger than any of them, tied in with the big Canadian mills, stacks and vats in batteries, timber rolling in, brown pulp going out by the trainload instead of a single car now and then.

"Dave Morgan was Scotch," he said. "The Scotch build well, but have no foresight or imagination. They want security and they sacrifice other things for it. They let the Irish go prowling around into all the new places, killing off the Injuns, and then along came your Scotchman with a wagonload of goods, for sale, and he took up all the good half-sections. Then they married all the good-looking daughters of the Irish and tamed them down to raise sons to fit this country."

"Maybe they married the Irish girls because, secretly, they wanted to hear somebody laugh," Daniels contributed with a grin.

"Maybe so. Maybe that's why Dave Morgan married Virgie. Virgie was a handsome woman when she was young. She's not bad looking now."

"Rather a fine-looking woman now," agreed young Daniels.

"But darned impractical," declared his host. "Business is getting better fast—but she ain't going to catch up with it."

"Because she turns out a hand-craft product in a machine age," stated Stanley Daniels, much pleased with himself.

"You're kind of smart, ain't you?" Wallace Withers relaxed his long jaw. "I reckon you must have collected some ideas about making pulp at a profit?" He sat down, laid his long yellow fingers together,

"If that's my poplar them bankers better keep off my place."

drew his upper lip far down, giving his face a little the look of the skull beneath it.

Daniels laughed a trifle nervously. This old geezer had something funny on his mind, obviously; his dry old eyes were full of sly secrets, his knuckles flexed with an involuntary, crushing movement.

"Well, any young man hates to see a business dragging," he said, choosing his words carefully. "Especially when he sees that that business is standing on its own foot, making its own troubles. That's what's wrong with the world now, Mr. Withers—the young people have the ideas and the ambition and the vision and courage—recklessness, I suppose you would call it—and people your age have all the power and all the money."

"Some people," Withers said, "would call you a young fool. But I don't. I'm a thinking man. Personally, I'd like to see what you'd do—running the Morgan mill."

Daniels laughed. "That," he said, "would be a grand idea—but just about as hopeless as most grand ideas. Mrs. Morgan isn't going to surrender the control of that mill to anybody."

Withers did not answer for a moment. The stove clinked, a mouse crept out from beneath an old organ, gave a bright-eyed, terrified look about, scurried back again.

"Virgie Morgan don't own all the stock in that mill," he said, looking straight ahead. "There's some of it loose—and a lot of things could happen. Things might happen so that more of it could be had. She ain't got any considerable reserve, I know that. I know how she's fixed. If trouble was to happen in the mill or orders fell off, she'd be hard put to raise the money to carry on."

Stanley Daniels felt a sudden surge of wry distaste. His tongue tasted of copper, his ears buzzed faintly. So this old hick had ideas in his ratty brain, did he? Trick stuff, likely. He had suspected it.

Let him pull his own potatoes out of the fire, then. Daniels felt very noble and superior as he stood up, pulled down his coat.

"Well, this has been very pleasant, Mr. Withers. But I'm a working man. I'd better say good night."

Withers collected his limbs and scrambled out of the chair.

"But wait a minute—you ain't going to walk? I was figuring on taking you back—car's standing outside."

"I think I'd like the walk," Daniels was smooth, impersonal, inscrutable. "Need the exercise."

"Thunder—it's most five miles. I'll run you down to the main road anyway. You can walk from there if you're itching for air."

Air. That was what Stanley Daniels felt the need for. His overcoat, his hatbrim snapped down, the door open, he felt honest again. He had had a hunch all along that this dry-eyed old guy was figuring on using him somehow. What made him hasten to be out in the wholesome air again was the awareness that he had been ready to hear Withers' schemes.

He had no inner hypocrisy. He knew that no loyalty would ever blind him to his own advantage. But he did not like being maneuvered, so he sat a little stiffly and replied in polite monosyllables to Withers' remarks, as they drove the rutty road to the highway.

He walked rapidly till he reached the outskirts of the village, his nostrils stinging in the frosty air. The town lay on a slope where the river widened, and as Daniels approached it the linked lights made it look like some jeweled ornament on the breast of the mountain.

He would go down to the mill, he decided. The air was keen and he should be certain that his tests were all right. A freeze would ruin several days' work.

At the mill he moved in authority and this pleased his young vanity. The men he spoke to had to listen. The forms that went out of his laboratory were commands; on them depended the quality of the Morgan pulp.

Only a few men were at the mill—the few who tended the processes that went on night and day. Daniels unlocked his laboratory, a tacked-on structure half brick, half wood, sheathed with metal. He snapped on the light, unlocked the cupboard where he kept his apparatus. His test-tubes, he saw, were all in good order, the thermometer stood at a safe temperature, and the rusty steam-pipe running along the wall was warm.

He put out the light again, locked the place. Then he saw that a light was burning in the office. It was after ten. Mrs. Morgan must be there. Lucy would not come down at night alone. She never came at night.

He stepped up to the office window and saw that the person inside was old Tom Pruitt.

Pruitt's status at the mill had always puzzled young Daniels. He knew that Pruitt had worked there since the plant was built, that he was always carrying messages from Virgie Morgan, giving orders that she initiated, yet he had apparently no definite position and no authority.

Daniels opened the office door. "Hello, Tom," he said, "anything wrong?"

Tom Pruitt looked up from Virgie's desk, where was spread out a loose array of legal-looking papers.

He looked baffled, his hair was standing up, but he grinned at Daniels. "Nope—nothing special. I'm studying out this here. Never did see such fine printing nor so much writing that didn't make head nor tail. You know anything about this here business?"

"Let's look at it," Stanley Daniels slid out of his overcoat.

"You gotta know something about law, I reckon," Tom got up gratefully, surrendered his chair. "I've kept shy of the law for 50 years but now it looks like it caught up with me at last. I own stuff and I don't own it. Take a look at all them and see what you make out of it. I've done give up."

Daniels sat down at the desk briskly and unfolded one document after another, read them through, with Tom looking over his shoulder, his amazement growing.

"How about these contracts, Pruitt? They paid you, did they?"

"Not since '26, they didn't. They didn't pay in five years, nor in seven neither. They ain't paid nothing since that paper was wrote."

"You should file suit then—get your land back."

"Yeah—she said that, too—Miss Morgan. She said I'd ought to go to law. She wants me to hire that feller Willis Pratt. I was just studying about it. Pratt will want a lot of money for nothing, I reckon—them lawyers always do."

"But—that land must have been worth money. How much have you got, anyway?"

"Upwards of a thousand acres—mountain land. Never could raise nothing on it."

"And these"—Daniels snapped a rubber band about the thick bundle of certificates—"ought to be in a safety deposit box in the bank. I didn't know you owned this big block of stock in the mill. You're a rich man, Pruitt—I'm glad I know you."

"Rich? Me?" Old Tom rubbed his ear. "I just got me a piece of this mill, that's all. Dave Morgan and me worked mighty hard to keep this mill goin'—and I been workin' harder since Dave died. No, I ain't rich. I got no wish to be rich."

"Ever draw any dividends on this stock? Any money for your piece of the mill?"

Tom shook his head. "We agreed not to take out nothing, Miss Morgan and me. We pay ourselves off every pay-day, just wages. I got all I need. It takes the rest to keep them presses rolling and the hands working. We're both satisfied."

"But you ought to get that land back. You ought to file a claim right away."

"Yeah—I reckon so. Reckon I'll have to get me a lawyer though I sure do hate to pay out money to that Willis Pratt."

"You could sell some of your stock, if you need money. That stuff is as good as cash, you know."

Will County Civic Group Makes Report

The Civic Committee of Will County, Inc., located at 155 N. Scott St., in Joliet, made this special report Dec. 9, to their members.

Subject: County Board Purchasing procedure.

At the Wednesday Dec. 4th session of the County Board of Supervisors, a series of three resolutions was introduced by Republican Supervisor Herman E. Ehlers of Beecher, as follows:

1. Provided that all orders be charged to their appropriation by the County Auditor before being placed with the vendor, and that orders exceeding the appropriation be refused by the County Auditor. This ordinance would prevent the various County officials from placing orders which would exceed their appropriations. It is felt that in the past officials have often unwittingly placed orders which they would not have placed had they been aware that they were over-expending their budget.

2. Provided that the responsibility for the spending of each item of the budget, be specifically laid upon a certain individual or committee.

This ordinance would prevent charges being made to appropriations by more than one individual or committee. This has often been a cause of over-expended items in the budget.

3. Provides for the placing of all orders above a stated amount on the basis of competitive bidding.

While the Supervisors will probably agree on the soundness of the principles of competitive bidding, this particular ordinance will probably require some adjustment, as to the method of administration. The question has been raised, whether or not some officials should be delegated the authority to open bids, place the orders, and report to their committees, or whether the committee should meet each time bids are to be solicited or opened. The County Board has already decreased its budget to such a point that if they do live within their budget, they will, this year, and in each succeeding year, make substantial reductions in their deficit. The question now is whether the County Board will be able to live within its budget and these ordinances proposed by Supervisor Ehlers, aim at the elimination of over-expenditure and unwise expenditures in the past. The Board of Supervisors of Will County will take final action on these measures Wednesday, December 11. The other members of the Finance Committee who have worked with Supervisor Ehlers are: John P. Conrad, Republican, Monee, and Sidney E. Baskin, Democratic, Joliet. It is hoped that since the Supervisors have made this move toward economy in their budgets, that they will match this action by acting now to insure operating efficiency, so that the budget can be adhered to.

Whitney Carter was called to Arkansas this week by the serious illness of his mother.

No trace has been found of the autoist who recently skidded off the street during the night and broke off a heavy iron pipe supporting a porch in front of the Blue Store. In falling the pipe broke a window in a door leading to the upstairs flat of Peter Homerding.

Chas. Erickson attended the annual meeting of the Cook County Farm Bureau held in LaGrange on Thursday of this week.

Jake Steeg had a narrow escape Thursday morning from serious injury while he was engaged working with N. F. Heiman on a plumbing job at the Renee Guindon place. A heavy piece of pipe which had been leaned up against a tree, began to slip and fell over, missing Steeg's head by a fraction of an inch. The pipe gave his hand and foot a glancing blow.

The newly organized sewing circle met at the home of Mrs. Anton Benson this week. Mrs. Benson was elected president and treasurer. A good time was had by all. Plans were made for a Christmas dinner to be held at the next meeting at the home of Mrs. George Heisner.

New Rock Island All-room Streamliner

With Governor Robert Taylor Jones of Arizona, christening the new "Arizona Limited" train with sand from the Arizona desert, accompanied by Mrs. Jones and the Misses Betsy Neff of Phoenix and Betty Proctor, of Tucson, as official "Hostesses", representing these two cities, the new all-room, streamlined Diesel-powered Pullman train of the Rock Island-Southern Pacific will be given a formal "send-off" Sunday, December 15, on its inaugural run of less than forty hours between Chicago and Phoenix. Governor Jones and party, are making the trip to Chicago from Arizona under the auspices of the Chambers of Commerce of Phoenix and Tucson, to help inaugurate the first all-Pullman, deluxe train out of Chicago to the famous winter resort sections of Southern Arizona.

Assisting in the christening and dedication ceremonies at LaSalle Station, Chicago, will be Mayor Kelly of Chicago, officers of the Chicago Association of Commerce as well as officials of the two railroads. The popularity of this type of new service, the railway officials state, is revealed in the fact that the entire train of seven all-room Pullman cars, was sold out ten days in advance of the inaugural run of December 15. The train will be operated out of Chicago on every other day until April 1, 1941 under present plans.

JESUS TEACHES HIS DISCIPLES
TO PRAY

LESSON TEXT—Luke 11:1-13.
 GOLDEN TEXT—Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock,
 and it shall be opened unto you.—Luke 11:9.

Teach us to pray!
 The request of the apostles was not that He should teach them how to pray, for He had already done that (see Matt. 6:5-7) in the Sermon on the Mount. What they needed, and what we need, is not so much to learn how to pray, but actually to pray. Prayer is more talked about than practiced. We discuss the doctrine of prayer, the time of prayer, the manner of prayer, posture in prayer; but how much do we really pray?

This is a very important and plain question which we must face personally. "Do I pray, or do I only talk about praying?" Let us not try to dodge it or excuse ourselves; let us face it honestly, do something about it, and know God's richer and fuller blessing for our lives.

We have in our lesson,
I. A Principle of Prayer (v. 9).

The one who has a right to call God his "Father" (v. 2) has a right to come and "ask" God for whatever he needs. God expects His children to ask, and many "have not, because ye ask not" (James 4:2). Give God a chance to answer you by asking, but be sure to ask aright, not for your own selfish purposes (James 4:3). The real asker is also a seeker—he doesn't ask and run away empty-handed—he persists. He not only "seeks," but he "knocks" at God's door. A knock is an evidence of faith—expectancy, and often persistency—all essential in real prayer.

II. The Promise of Prayer (vv.

9-13).

Here is the promise of our Lord.
 We are quick to claim the promises of our friends, business associates,
 the government; why are we so slow
 in claiming the promises of God?
 Can it be that we have less confidence in Him than we have in our neighbor? Asking means receiving, seeking results in finding, knocking brings the open door of His blessing. Why not do it?

God is our Father. Even a man rightly bearing the beautiful title
 "father" is loving and considerate.
 Will not the heavenly Father then give us every good thing? In fact, the Holy Spirit Himself is ours in all His fullness, and in Him there is every other gift.

III. A Parable Concerning Prayer

(vv. 5-8).

The point of this story is that we should be persistent in prayer. Im-portunity carries with it a sense of being troublesome, bothering someone until the desired result is attained. God encourages His children to a holy boldness which does not give up (see Luke 18:1-8; Matt.
 15:21-28). If a man who is only a friend will at the impossible hour of midnight supply a need which should have been anticipated to feed one who is a stranger to him, will not our Father, who "neither slumbers nor sleeps," who knows and loves us all, meet our deep spiritual need?
 Indeed He will, "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think" (Eph. 3:20).

IV. The Practice of Prayer (vv.

1-4).

There is no one who can teach us to pray better than Jesus, for He "practiced what He preached." He prayed. It was seeing Him pray that led the disciples to ask Him to teach them to pray. To profess is one thing, but it is far better to practice. The teacher who does not practice prayer will accomplish little in teaching this lesson, but the one who prays, though able to say but little, will cause many to say,
 "Teach me to pray."

For the practice of prayer, Jesus taught His disciples a model prayer. This does not mean that this is the only prayer to be offered, nor that it is the only form of prayer.
 As suggested, it is rather a model.

This prayer opens with a recognition of God as Father, followed by a reverent petition that His name may be hallowed; that is, that He may have glory as His will is done and His kingdom established in the hearts of men. Those who have that spiritual life and attitude are ready to ask for the supply of daily needs, and above all forgiveness of sin and deliverance from temptation. Note that verse 4 is not the prayer of the unsaved for forgiveness and regeneration, for that is all of grace (Eph.
 2:8). "The man outside (of the kingdom) gets his forgiveness with no condition; but once he is in the kingdom of the Son of God's love, he lives within the laws of that kingdom. Then he does not get forgiveness unless he is ready to forgive, unless he has forgiven" (Morgan).
 "Nothing more surely destroys communion than the unforgiving spirit (Matt. 6:14, 15; Mark 11:25). The fact that we forgive others is not the ground on which God forgives us, but it is the condition of our enjoying God's forgiveness (Eph. 1:7; 4:32)" (Bradbury).

Follow These Rules When Addressing Christmas Cards

IN ADDRESSING Christmas cards, many questions are bound to arise with regard to correct form.
 The following tips on addressing Christmas cards will, therefore, be welcomed by all who have cards to send.

Christmas greeting cards fall into two general classes, formal and informal. If you use printed or engraved cards for formal use, the title Miss, Mr., or Mr. and Mrs.
 should preferably appear above the greeting. For instance: "Mr. and Mrs. Frank Russell wish you a Merry Christmas," rather than "A Merry Christmas from Mr. and Mrs.
 Frank Russell."

Whose name should come first,
 the husband's or the wife's? Generally, the husband's name comes first. On informal cards, signed in ink, it is quite proper to sign, "Bill and Shirley," or Bill and Shirley Adams, depending, of course, upon how well you know the acquaintance.

A married woman, whether her husband is alive or not, should be addressed with "Mrs." prefixed to her husband's full name. Every card sent out should bear a Mr., Mrs., or Miss prefix. Failure to use this prefix is an unpardonable breach of courtesy.

Do not address a divorcee by her maiden name, unless such name has been established by legal procedure.

John Robertson may be a business associate of yours, to whom you want to send a Christmas card, but you do not know his wife. What shall you do in a case of this kind?
 It is quite proper to send your card to Mr. and Mrs. John Robertson, although, on the other hand, it is equally proper to send the card in his name only. It adds a little of the personal touch to learn the home address and send the card there, although directing the card to a business address is quite proper.

Some question as to the propie-ty of sending out Christmas cards may enter the minds of the family in mourning. By the same token, some question may arise as to the sending of Christmas cards to them.
 If the bereavement is very recent—within a month—it may be better for the family to omit Christmas cards.
 And cards to be sent to the family should be selected with considerable care.

Superstitions About Christmas

SIGNIFICANT meanings surround Christmas, according to superstitions believed in various parts of the world.

❑ In Holstein, Mistletoe is not only supposed to be a cure for all green wounds, but will insure success in the chase and give strength to the wrestler.

❑ Early Norsemen believed for centuries that the Mistletoe would give protection against both bodily ailments and evil spirits.

❑ A person who is born on Christmas will have power to see and command spirits, according to a Scottish belief.

❑ French peasants believe that babies born on Christmas have the gift of prophecy.

❑ If a baby is born at sermon time
 on Christmas Eve in Middle Europe, it portends that someone in the house will die within the year.

❑ Daughters born in the Vosges, France, on December 25 will be wise, witty and virtuous.

❑ A baby born on Christmas in Silesia will become either a lawyer or a thief.

❑ Girls in the ancient Duchy of Swavia seldom missed the opportunity offered by Christmas to look into the future at their future husbands. On Christmas Eve they would go to the woodpile to draw sticks. If a girl pulled a thick stick, her husband would be stout; if a long stick,
 he would be tall; if a crooked stick,
 he would be deformed. They would determine the business of their future husbands by dropping melted lead into a pan of cold water. The molten metal would form various shapes in cooling, and thus resemble the insignia of his occupation: hammer shape, a carpenter; shoe shape, a cobbler. Every piece of lead resembled some occupation to the old wives.

❑ A maiden in Switzerland who accepts a bunch of Edelweiss at Christmas also accepts the man who profers it.

❑ All animals in the German Alps can speak on Christmas Eve.

❑ It is believed in the Netherlands that nothing sown on Christmas Eve will perish. Even seed sown in the snow will live.

❑ A Bohemian wife will die within a year if she burns a Christmas cake.

❑ To insure an abundant harvest in Denmark, some of the bread baked on Christmas is kept until sowing time, when it is mixed with the seed.

❑ It is said that bread baked on Christmas in England never becomes moldy.

❑ Ashes must not be thrown out on Christmas day in some sections of Europe, for fear they might be thrown into the Savior's face.

❑ Some families in Scandinavia place all their shoes together on Christmas. This will cause them to live in harmony throughout the year.

CHARM OF CHRISTMAS

THE chief charm of Christmas is its simplicity. It is a festival that appeals to everyone because everyone can understand it. A genuine fellowship pervades our common life—a fellowship whose source is our common share in the world's greatest Life which was given to the whole world.—Kimball.

French Village Portrays

Story of Christ's Birth

Les Baux in France, a village of shepherds, puts on one of the most dramatic Christmas celebrations in the world, and has done it yearly for over a thousand years. The peasants act out the whole Bethlehem story. Joseph and Mary drive into the "City of David" with real oxen. Thousands of visitors come every Christmas eve to see the event.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Someone has just thimbled a letter on my drawing board to give my day a good start. It is from a reader who says, "I have all five of the sewing booklets and every time I look through them I find some exciting new thing to make that I have not seen before." Hurrah! I am certainly happy when people say they like those booklets. I have been so interested in doing them, and now Book 6 is ready for mailing. It is full of new ideas for making new things for the home. I am pretty excited about it and hope you like it and use it again and again just as so many of you have written me that you have used the others. This new Book 6 contains a description of each of the other five booklets of the series. Send order to:

THE TRUTH SIMPLY TOLD

These physicians, too, approve every word of advertising you read, the objective of which is only to recommend Doan's Pills as a good diuretic treatment for disorder of the kidney function and for relief of the pain and worry it causes. If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed. Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warn of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes — feel weak, nervous, all played out. Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!
